99th Flying Training Squadron

SQUADRON HISTORY

The 99 FTS started as the 99th Pursuit Squadron on 19 March 1941 at Chanute Field, IL. It was activated on 22 March 1941 and re-designated as the 99th Fighter Squadron on 15 May 1942. The original "Tuskegee Airmen" squadron, the unit was the first all-black unit in the U.S. Army Air Corps. It was disbanded in 1949 before being re-formed in 1988 flying the T-38 at Williams Air Force Base, Arizona. The squadron moved to Randolph in 1993 and began flying the T-1A aircraft.

Present day, the 99th Flying Training Squadron leads the way on the Air Force's first new trainer aircraft in thirty years, the T-7A Red Hawk.

Lieutenant Colonel Dominique Haig will leave her mark on the Squadron as the latest in a distinguished line of former commanders. Lieutenant Colonel Michael Trott will play a vital role in continuing to mold and shape the future of Air Force pilot training.

Lieutenant Colonel Dominique M. Haig

Lt Col Dominique M. Haig is the Commander, 99th Flying Training Squadron, Joint Base San Antonio-Randolph, Texas. The 99 FTS is the Department of Defense's T-7A initial operational test and evaluation squadron and will execute T-7A pilot instructor training.

Lt Col Haig earned her commission through the Reserve Officer Training Corps at Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University in 2006 where she was a Distinguished Graduate. Following pilot training, Lt Col Haig remained at Columbus AFB, Mississippi as a First Assignment Instructor Pilot in the T-1A before continuing on to Yokota AB, Japan where she flew the C-130H. While at Yokota AB she held various positions at the squadron and wing level. She was selected for the Air Officer Commanding program at the United States Air Force Academy, Colorado, where she led 115 cadets annually through training in preparation for their commission. She concluded that assignment as the executive officer to the Superintendent.

Prior to taking command, Lt Col Haig was the Director of Operations for the 99th Flying Training Squadron, Joint Base San Antonio-Randolph, Texas, where she led execution of a $4.38M flying hour program and all aspects of T-1A pilot instructor training.

Lt Col Haig is a Command Pilot with more than 3,400 hours in the T-37, T-1, T-53, and C-130H performing combat and contingency flight operations in USPACOM, USCENCOM, and US- AFRICOM .

Colonel John P. Anderson

Col John P. Anderson is the Commander, 12th Operations Group, 12th Flying Training Wing, Joint Base San Antonio-Randolph, Texas. The group is responsible for introduction to fighter fundamentals student and instructor upgrade missions, as well as the Air Force's pilot instructor training, undergraduate remotely piloted aircraft pilot training, and basic sensor operator training programs. The group consists of five flying training squadrons, an operations support squadron, and a training squadron with more than 350 flying instructors, 20 enlisted members, and 282 DoD civilians and contractors who collectively produce more than 1,000 graduates per year.

Prior to assuming his current position, Col Anderson served as the Chief of Air Forces Central's Future Operations Division (A35) responsible for operationalizing strategic guidance for U.S. Central Command's air component. Col Anderson is a distinguished graduate of the United States Air Force Academy, T-6 Pilot Instructor Training, and F-16C Initial Qualification Course. He has performed duties as an F-16C mission commander, instructor pilot, and evaluation flight examiner and flew combat sorties over Iraq and Libya in Operations NEW DAWN, ODYSSEY DAWN, and UNIFIED PROTECTOR.
